WHEN TO SAY I LOVE YOU

You've been dating a guy for a few months when he shows up at your door with a small silver bag.

After kissing you hello, he hands it to you and closely watches your face. You reach into the bag and find a slim black box nestled in the tissue paper.

You open it...

And gape at the diamond tennis bracelet.

"Let me put it on you," he says eagerly.

As he fastens it around your wrist, you feel uncomfortable.

You dread to think how much it cost.

Believing in Soulmates
Can Lead
You to Love

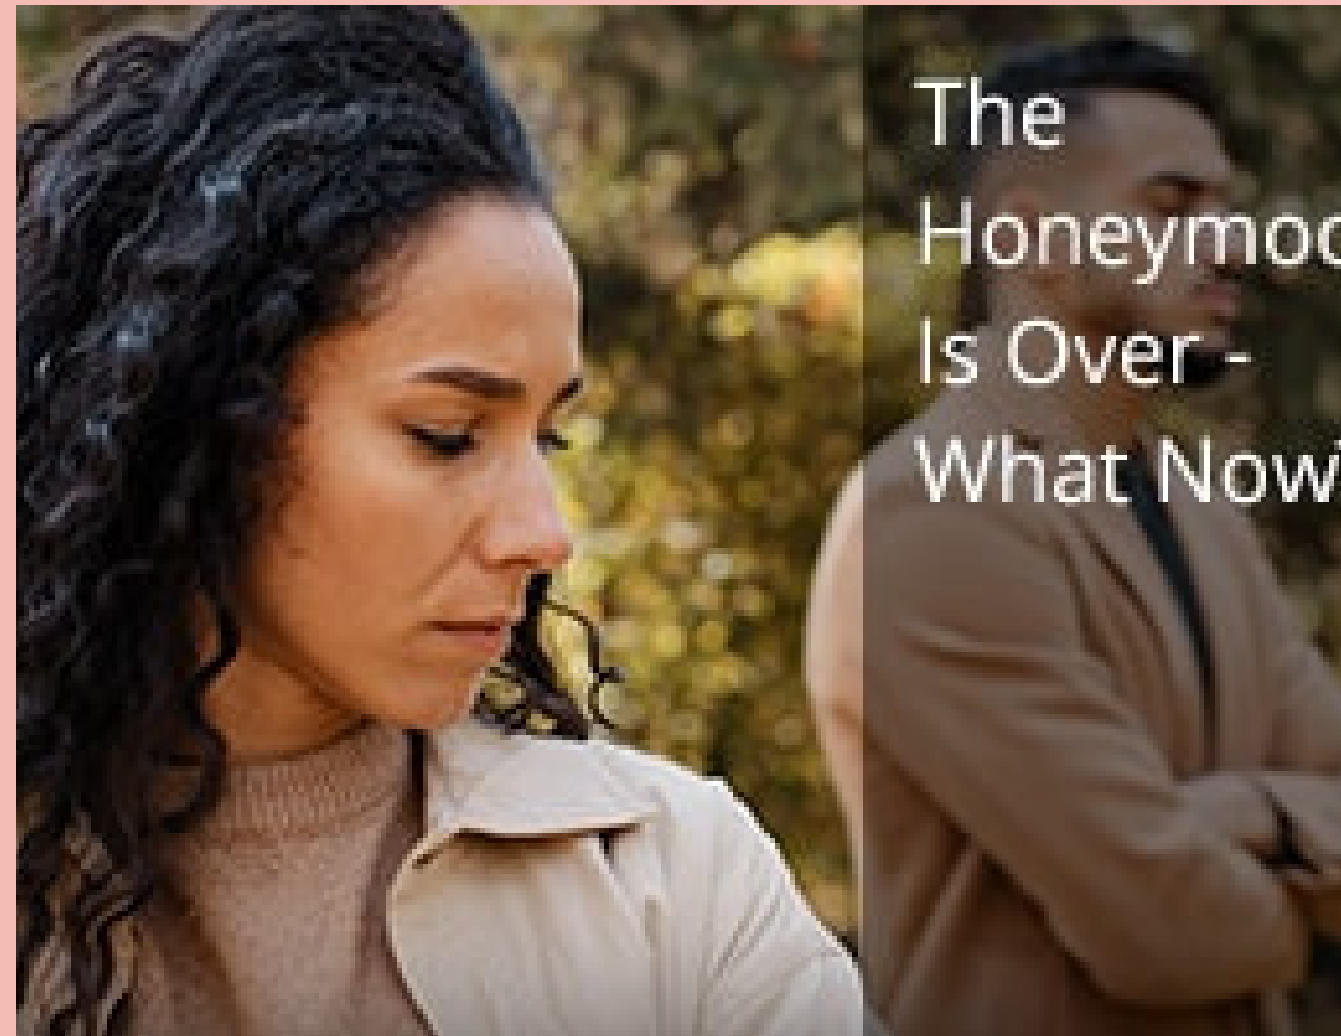

BELIEVING IN SOULMATES CAN LEAD YOU TO LOVE

In some circles, it's not fashionable to believe in soulmates. Who would believe there's just one person out there for you—in this day and age? There's no such thing as soulmates, the cynics say. Just the right person for right now.

But people have believed in soulmates for a long, long time. We wouldn't have so many love stories if there wasn't something universal about the magical “click” you experience with the right person.

THE HONEYMOON IS OVER WHAT NOW?

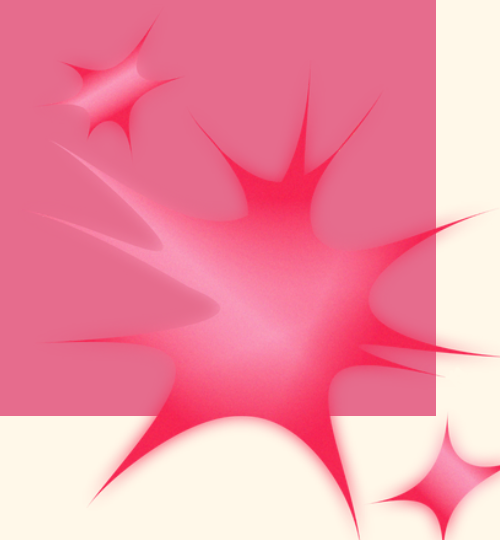

ow, to you, those reasons don't seem very good.

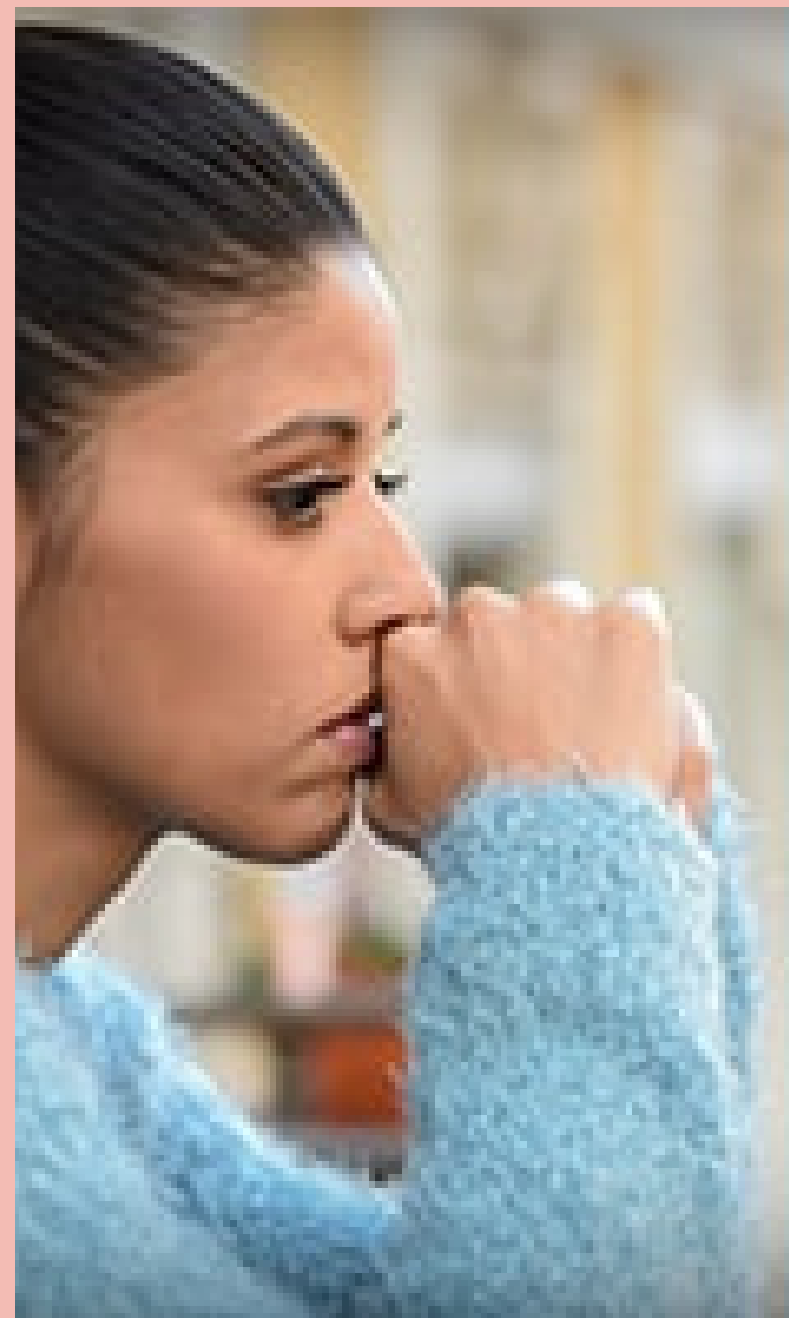

Of course it's not fun all the time. Of course you expect more from him the longer you're together. Of course you don't think he's perfect—no one is!

It's possible that you could try to prolong the relationship by always being the fun girlfriend who never asks anything of him and never criticizes him for anything. But that would just leave you stuck in a superficial relationship that's going nowhere.

Instead, try the little-known technique I'm about to teach you.

It builds “relationship muscles” so that your relationship can handle anything life throws your way.

He Says
He Doesn't Want a Relationship

HE SAYS HE DOESN'T WANT A RELATIONSHIP

You love him. You'd do anything for him.

He knows that.

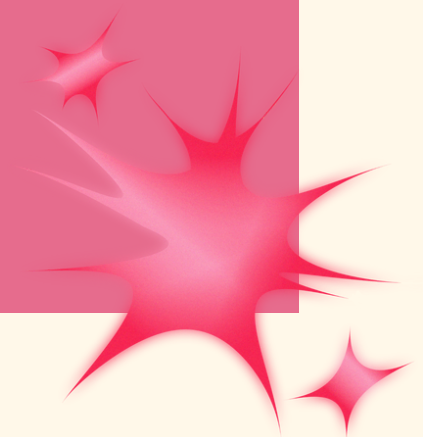

So why is he telling you that he doesn't want a relationship?

It's not the right time, he's not in the right space, he can't commit to anyone right now.

Lots of excuses, but nothing that satisfies you.

You know he cares about you.

You can tell it from the way he acts. He's done kind and caring things for you. He wouldn't have done that if he had no feelings towards you.
